The present invention

relates to the field of suspended ceiling structures. More particularly, the invention relates to an electromagnetic energy transfer element for use in a suspended ceiling system.

Suspended ceilings are well known in the art. For example, in U.S.

Pat. No. 3,308,505 to O. F.

Holmgren, an electromagnetic energy transfer system is disclosed which includes a first electric lamp means having a lampbulb or like discharge tube with a filament therein which is connected to a source of electrical energy and a second lamp means, which may be an incandescent lamp, a fluorescent lamp, or a discharge lamp having a small and portable construction, which has a discharge tube with the filament therein and which is connected to a source of electrical energy. An elongated conductor means, having a length such that one end thereof is adjacent the filament of the first lamp means and the other end is spaced from the discharge tube of the second lamp means, is connected between the first and second lamp means, and may be made from suitable materials such as wire, copper tubing, flexible metal strip, or the like. While the structure disclosed in the Holmgren patent works well, its flexibility makes it difficult to install and requires the use of a large number of components. In addition, the use of a flat conductor which is flexible along its longitudinal axis can be prone to breakage when the suspended ceiling structure is subjected to high stresses due to the construction of the ceiling. Accordingly, it is an object of the present invention to provide an electromagnetic energy transfer element which is of simple construction and installation. It is a further object of the present invention to provide an electromagnetic energy transfer element which is flexible and durable. It is another object of the present invention to provide an electromagnetic energy transfer element which is easy to install

---
