The eighteen-year-old has to be one of the best young prospects in the game: she's the 16th seed, owns a smart game, is some two centimetres shorter than her opponent, and also plays two sets in a match. When I meet her, on the eve of the tie-breaks, she's been practising on grass all day. She's nervous, but not that nervous. "There are two players who have been my idols since I was a kid," she tells me. "I have always looked up to them, so to play against them would be a great honour. I try to approach everything like a real opponent. That would mean I would be able to play in front of an audience." It's getting closer to the end of the year, at this time of year I've started watching Wimbledon, so I've started watching Hantuchová, and she's been great so far. I liked her match against the third seed from the other country. She's well-prepared for her next match. This year, she's getting better each time. When the left hand goes out, she practises
