If you liked the new user interface and workflow and haven't used it after the 1.0 release, you might want to do so. Adobe has been hard at work on it, and this is an exciting time for them in terms of the next version of Photoshop and other Creative Cloud products. Adobe generally has been releasing new versions of software at regular intervals, but the last few have been fasted than usual because the upgrade was substantial. This is not so much about the new features, as the overall design and workflow of the program. On more than one occasion I have used a Mac, Photoshop version (maybe CS3 or CS4), and it was like night and day to work with the new software (in terms of feeling out of place). It is definitely nicer than the old version, and I will say that it is the best version of software I have ever used. This is why the ability to grasp the fundamentals of a post-processing toolset and apply that knowledge across various programs is so important. Whether you choose Adobe's full-featured Photoshop for professional work or Adobe's lightweight, easy-to-learn Photoshop Express for casual use, the software puts effort into providing as many ways to get the job done as possible. I really hope that the next battle between Apple and Microsoft is not about the software on your phone or tablet. It's certainly not solely about the hardware, as there are many issues besides the operating system and various chipsets that cause problems for users. It should also be considered that by putting all our eggs in one technology basket, we are not improving the overall user experience.

On the Elements side, Photoshop's best-selling feature is probably its powerful selection tool. With the release of Photoshop CC for the iPad, there was also a Mac version, which tied with Elements as the fastest of the two apps in the Office for iPad suite. But that's changing now. Elements now has an easy Path Selection tool, which is faster and more accurate than Selection by Drag. With the new version, you can now create custom selections with selections that behave more like Live Paint writing. One of the most powerful tools in Photoshop is the Content-Aware Fill feature. This is a feature that tells Photoshop where a face is located in an image, and applies the corresponding color. Now that you can Layer Mask an image to hide parts of it, adorably called the "Blister" tool, the Content-Aware Fill feature has new capabilities to render a still image's content. This is especially handy of you have positioned an image within another image. Now with the Supersonic Filter, you can shoot a picture and have it automatically add a high-quality vignette, rounded corners, and other effects, with just a few pulls of the iPhone's volume buttons. Set your iPhone's volume to one for video, three for portrait, and five for landscape. Do so in Photos, and when you next shoot a picture, you'll have a new type of selfie. You can also use these settings to adjust vignetting in any RAW photo. For more info, like how to use the Supersonic feature, watch this. One of the many new features in Photoshop CC is the ability to shoot stunning HDR images from a range of digital cameras. You can shoot as many shots as you'd like on your iPhone, including five high-quality versions. There is no need to load the shots up separately used for individual edits. You can do all of this from the comfort of your home. After editing, the results can now be exported in a few different formats, so you can get them out to family and friends.
